Dear Recruiting Team,

I write this letter in order to express my interest in finding a position in the field. I have read over the requirements most companies are looking for and I firmly believe that I would be able to demonstrate the skills that you are looking for in a candidate.

I am currently a student at George Brown College enrolled in the Computer Programmer Analyst 3 years diploma. As a 5th semester student, I have acquired many skills that I will be able to showcase in this position. Skills in specific languages such as HTML, JavaScript and CSS to build dynamic websites. I have also learned programming principles in order to create imperative and procedural applications while maintaining data persistence and security by using Oracle and SQL as database storage. Additionally, I have built a solid knowledge base on core web principals such as how HTTP, the DOM, SSL and web servers work through class's content and self exploration on these topics driven by my curiosity. I strongly believe that I can learn any technology and skills I put my mind into. I like being challenged and finding new ways to expand my knowledge

I have also had the chance of working as a Career PeerCoach at Peerconnect from George Brown College. This job provided me the chance to improve my soft skills by preparing and delivering workshops on soft skills such as Leadership, Time Management and Powerful Presentations. Additionally, I advise students on how to improve their career development process by showing them the best way to get ready for a job position. This opportunity allowed me to learn how to communicate my thoughts and teach my knowledge and skills.

Thanks for taking the time for going over my application. I am looking forward to hearing back from you, please feel free to contact me over any of my contact details provided.

Sincerely,
Sergio Lombana
